

How To Avoid Trade Secret Disputes

Published September 19, 2012

Although non-compete and trade secret litigators by definition make our living from disputes involving unfair competition, often the most useful part of our practice involves advising clients on how to avoid litigation. John Marsh of Hahn Loeser has compiled an excellent list for employers and their new hires, of things not to do when the employee leaves the old job, titled The Trade Secret Litigator's 7 Deadly Sins of Departing Employees in Trade Secret and Non-Compete Disputes. This should be required reading for any transitioning employee; if universally followed, it could put trade secret lawyers out of business!

Author

William "Chip" Collins Jr.

Partner
Atlanta, GA

Burr & Forman publications should not be construed as legal advice on any specific facts or circumstances. The contents are intended for general information purposes only and may not be quoted or referred to in any other publication or proceeding without the prior written consent of the Firm, to be given or withheld at our discretion. The mailing of this publication is not intended to create, and receipt of it does not constitute, an attorney-client relationship. The views set forth herein are the personal views of the authors and do not necessarily reflect those of the Firm. If legal advice is sought, no representation is made about the quality of the legal services to be performed or the expertise of the lawyers performing such service.